

Nationwide Sonder Survey Reveals Top Travel Destinations and Travel Preferences

Plans for personal travel, longer trips and increased interest in digital nomadism among U.S. respondents emerge, as travel and hospitality industries see renewed demand

SAN FRANCISCO (August 3, 2021) - Sonder, a leading next-generation hospitality company that is redefining the guest experience through technology and design, today released new survey findings, providing data and insights into the return of travel following one of the most severe downturns in the travel and hospitality industries in history. The report, conducted in partnership with Ipsos, indicates that a majority of U.S. adults have plans for personal travel in the coming months, with many prioritizing affordability, cleanliness, as well as urban discovery or beach vacations.

Survey highlights include:

- Americans are ready to travel for personal reasons and within the U.S. Roughly two-thirds of adults (62%) say they'll travel for personal reasons before the end of the year. Over one-third (35%) of respondents planning business trips say they plan to tack on personal excursions to at least three-fourths of their business trips.
- Longer trips and becoming a “digital nomad” are enticing options for Americans looking to travel, especially among certain demographic groups. Six-in-ten (59%) Americans are interested in taking a trip for two weeks or more over the next year. Another six-in-ten Americans (59%) are interested in being a “digital nomad” – or working remotely on a long-term trip – with interest higher among younger adults aged 18-34 (74%), followed closely by family travelers (69%). For travelers booking long-term stays, many of Sonder's spaces offer fully-equipped kitchens, living rooms, multiple bedrooms and en-suite laundry, delivering a comfortable place to spread out and work remotely for extended periods.
- After a year and a half of COVID-19, Americans say their ideal trip means exploring a new city or relaxing on the beach. Post-pandemic, American travelers are most excited about a change of scenery (52%). With locations in more than 35 cities, Sonder offers modern apartments in urban centers as well as beachside suites.
- While affordability was the top consideration, cleanliness is a key priority among Americans considering travel in 2021. Cleanliness ranks as #2 on the most important elements for accommodations. Location and safety are #3 and #4, respectively. In addition to professional housekeeping, Sonder thoroughly cleans and disinfects each Sonder before and after every stay.
- The majority of American travelers polled (65%) will take their next trip with their partner. Most are not willing to travel with those outside their bubble yet, with travelers less likely to travel by themselves (19%), with friends (15%), or with family outside of their own household (13%).
- New York City and New Orleans top the list of desired domestic destinations among Americans looking to travel in 2021. London and Rome are top of the list for international travel. Family travelers, or adults planning to travel with children, are particularly interested in visiting New York City (50%), followed by New Orleans and Washington, DC (both 34%). Sonder offers a variety of modern accommodation options at an exceptional value in each of these locations, including: modern spaces in New York's Financial District with a stunning rooftop pool, a spacious suite steps away from Central Park, a charming studio in the heart of the French Quarter in New Orleans and a sophisticated space close to local coffee shops and famed Canjun-Creole restaurants.
